Directional signs are designed for individual orders, or

according to the entrusted project.

Here are some tips for creating effective hotel directional signs:

Location: Directional signs should be placed in strategic locations such as lobbies, hallways, stairs, elevators, and outside the building. It is important that they are placed in a visible place and well lit.

Color and Contrast: The plates should be legible and easy to read. That's why it's important to choose contrasting background colors and fonts. It is recommended to use light colors on a dark background or dark colors on a light background.

Readability: Font size and style are also important. Easy-to-read fonts should be chosen, and the size should be large enough for visitors to quickly and easily read the information on the board.

Organize: Organize the information on your directional board in a logical way, such as by floors, sections, or geographic directions. It is important that guests can easily find places of interest.

Content: The information on the board should be up-to-date and comprehensive. It is worth including information about places such as restaurants, meeting rooms, swimming pools, spas, guest rooms and the most important tourist attractions in the area.

Language: Keep in mind that guests may come from different countries and speak different languages. Therefore, it makes sense to put information on the board in several languages, such as English, German, French and Spanish.

Attention to proper placement, color, font, order, content and language on direction boards are key elements that will help guests orientate themselves in the hotel and feel more comfortable.
